Psychosocial disabilities, including schizophrenia and bipolar disorders, rank among the most disabling conditions globally. People living with psychosis in Africa are among the vulnerable population and they face homelessness, abuse, and poor standard of health care, as well as pronounced stigma and discrimination. This research is being conducted to identify the existing resources and gaps that need to be taken into consideration in developing and implementing a Community-Based Rehabilitation (CBR) intervention for persons with psychosis in four African Countries. Additionally, this research is also implementing and evaluating a randomized controlled trial which consists of a CBR- package of care for people living with psychosocial disabilities in four African countries. (Malawi, Nigeria, Sierra Leone and Zimbabwe). Funded by the UK Foreign, Commonwealth and Development Office (FCDO) (Role: Co-Investigator)

- ii. Ending Child mArriage in Nigeria through community -led media Series. (ENCASE Project)

Child marriage hinders progress toward population health and development goals. Cost-effective interventions that address the root causes of child marriage are needed to speed progress toward ending the practice. Nigeria is home to the largest number of married girls in Africa. Many of these girls are members of the Hausa ethnic group, which has the highest rates of child marriage of any major ethnic group in the country, making efforts to tackle this issue particularly urgent among this population. This research is a pre-post controlled trial which will co-produce a series of radio programs in Hausa language that address gender inequitable attitudes that motivate child marriage among Hausa communities in Ibadan, Nigeria. The content of the series will be developed based on input from the Hausa community. Thereafter, the impact of the intervention will be measured.
